Abstract

A method is provided for generating a triggering decision for a restraint system, which is distinguished in that the triggering decision is generated as a function of a conjunction of the vehicle lateral acceleration and a rate of rotation. The vehicle lateral acceleration is 5   additionally subjected to a threshold value decision, the respective threshold value being set as a function of at least one component of the velocity of the vehicle's center of gravity.

(Figure 9)